Rare sighting of Sociable Lapwing in Jaisalmer, Rajasthan

An IUCN Red List ‘Critically Endangered’ bird was sighted in the Jaisalmer district of Rajasthan after 15 years. The Sociable Lapwing Vanellus gregarius migrates from Kazakhstan, for over 10,000 km every year.

The species lives its life across several habitats, including dry subtropical and temperate grasslands, wetlands, and temperate desserts. Its population has declined by about 40% between 1930 and 1960, and further got halved between 1960 and 1987 in northern Kazakhstan (Birdlife International 2019).

In 2020, an individual of Sociable Lapwing was seen in the waterbodies of three villages in Jaisalmer, namely, Khetolai, Chacha, and Lathi sitting... among a flock of Red-Wattled Lapwing Vanellus indicus. Again on 8 November 2021, two individuals were observed in waterbodies at Khetolai and Chacha amidst Red-Wattled Lapwing flock. Individuals of Sociable Lapwing were seen flying and feeding across different water bodies, in these villages. Radheshyam Bishnoi has made a video and reported the Sociable Lapwing in eBird in 2020. This is a report to publish the finding formally along with photograph and video.

---

Reference

Acknowledgement: I wish to thank my co-Fellow at the Ram Hattikudur Advanced Training in Conservation, Trisa Bhattacharjee, for helping me in writing this note.