ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, I would like to thank Mr. Divyabhanusinh – one of India's most respected conservationists – his expertise on the Indian Cheetah and the Asiatic Lion is unparalleled and unmatched. Divyabhanusinh has been an eternal source of encouragement and help. His seminal work on the Indian Cheetah in the form of his book The End of Trail: Cheetah in India is and will always be the most comprehensive work on the subject. It was his book that inspired me to find more about the Cheetah's life and death. And it was indeed a great honour for me to have this paper reviewed by him.

I would like to express my sincerest gratitude towards Mr. Vinod Rishi, I.F.S., A.D.G. Wildlife (Retd.) who originally suggested that I write a paper narrating my new findings and references on the Cheetah. A treasure-trove of knowledge and a doyen of the fast vanishing clique of wildlife-oriented field officers, he has been a great mentor to me and among the most helpful and humble people I've come across.

Dr. M.K. Ranjitsinh, an authority on the Cheetah and one of India's foremost conservationists, promptly responded to my queries with his typical short, crisp and to-the-point answers. And it was a privilege for me to have this paper reviewed by him as well.

I can never thank enough the man to whom I owe whatever little knowledge I have of India's flora and fauna and the issues that afflict India's wildlife – my father, S.E.H. Kazmi, I.F.S. He has and will always be my inspiration; I could never have authored this paper without his encouragement, help and support. I'm grateful to Aamir Kazmi, my cousin, for his encouragement and humorous ways that always kept me in good spirits. Last, but by no means least, I would like to thank my mother Sanjida Kazmi and sister Zehra Kazmi for all their love and support.
